

Two Column Reading Order Probe

Alpha. The left column carries the first half of the argument and it runs for several sentences so that the block of text on this side of the page has the ragged silhouette that a real typeset paragraph has rather than a stack of identical lines. It mentions figures such as 5,05 percent and 7,09 percent, and it refers to the year 2024 more than once, because prose in a report tends to.

Beta. The right column continues on the other side of the gutter and it is written to a different length so the two blocks do not line up neatly at the bottom edge. It discusses inflation of 3,25 percent, exports worth 355,5 billion dollars, and a handful of other numbers that would appear in a macroeconomic bulletin of this kind.